Former National Football League player and children's author Tim Green has added another book to his list of accomplishments: Unstoppable. The book tells the story of a 12-year-old boy named Harrison, who survives life in a cruel foster-home(寄养家庭) before he finally finds a loving family. Then he settles in and realizes his natural football ability but he loses his leg due to a deadly bone cancer. Unstoppable follows Harrison's difficult life journey.

Tim Green said he decided to write a novel about a kid facing cancer after watching how his wife fought to survive her own illness. "Her mental and physical toughness were more heroic to me than anything I'd ever seen in the national sports leagues," Green told TFK.

Green said, he knew he needed to write about a person who struggled through a serious illness. But because the target age for his books is the teen, he needed to tell the story through the eyes of someone of that age. He needed a perfect real story on which to base his book.

When friends introduced Green to Jeffrey Keith, Green knew he had found the right person to help him "capture(捕捉) the heroism that it takes to fight cancer". Cancer-survivor Jeffrey Keith lost his leg at the age of twelve, but went on to be the goalkeeper and was also the first amputee(被截肢者) to run 3,300 miles across the country.

TFK asked Keith what it felt like to read Unstoppable for the first time. "Tim captured what it felt like for me to go through this experience and battle back," Keith said. "Tim's book sends a message to all the kids across the country that are facing challenges and that have nothing to do with cancer; you are all unstoppable, as long as you believe it."

C. It is filled with chances.

D. He has introduced it to many people.

27. What's Jeffrey Keith's attitude towards Unstoppable?

A. Worried. B. Cautious. C. Uncertain. D. Favorable.

C

Earth is home to around 7,000 languages, around half of which are expected to disappear by 2100.

Sometimes younger generations stop learning a language because parents want children to fit in. Sometimes societies force minorities (少数民族) to give up their languages. Native American children of the late-19th century were required to attend boarding schools where educators forbade them from speaking their native languages.

The United Nations ranks endangered (濒临灭绝的) languages according to their risk level. A "critically endangered" language is one that even grandparents don't speak often. New York's Onondaga language is the one with only 50 speakers left. An "extinct" language has no speakers. It is gone forever. Alaska's Eyak language is one of "extinct" languages. The last person who spoke it died in 2008.

Various animals and plants benefit our environment. In the same way, different languages contribute to cultural diversity (多样性). Saving these languages can help our understanding of other cultures. Languages can show how a society looks at the world and what it values. A language may describe something in a way that is funny, too. In Welsh, it rains not cats and dogs, but old wives and walking sticks.

The Endangered Language Alliance wants to save languages from disappearing. The nonprofit group finds native speakers and records their stories. However, if an endangered language is going to make a real comeback, it'll probably get its start in schools. For nearly 100 years, public schools in Hawaii did not teach the Hawaiian language. Now students can keep learning in Hawaiian from primary schools to college and beyond.

Can a language with zero native speakers come back to life? At least one did. In 1881, a Jewish linguist (语言学家) named Eliezer Ben-Yehuda brought the 3,000-year-old language Hebrew back to life. Today it is one of the official languages of the country of Israel, with more than 4 million speakers.

28. What is paragraph 2 mainly about?

A. How to prevent languages from disappearing.
B. The reasons for the disappearance of languages.
C. The development of language teaching at school.
D. Why people refuse to learn their native languages.

29. How does the author mainly try to explain the ranks of endangered languages?

A. By analyzing figures. B. By making comparisons.
C. By giving examples. D. By using official statements.

30. Why should endangered languages be saved?

A. They play a key part in culture.
B. They help minorities to survive.
C. They diversify the life of animals.
D. They contribute to school education.

31. What does the author think of the nonprofit group's efforts?
- A. They are far from enough. B. They are quite difficult.
C. They have made a big difference. D. They are of little importance.

D

It's always nice to have a little help around the house. But what if you could employ the assistance of one of the greatest minds of the 20th century?

That's the idea behind a new robot modeled after Albert Einstein. Called Professor Einstein and standing at just over a foot tall, this personal assistant can tell you the weather and keep track of your schedule like any other robots. With built-in Wi-Fi, Einstein robot has access to brain teasing games, and can answer math problems and science questions. With natural language speech processing, you can actually interact with Professor Einstein. And because the robot is connected to the Internet, it is constantly updated with new information.

To help get the perfect replica(复制品) of Einstein, the Hong Kong-based tech company Hanson Robotics turned to the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, the home of the Albert Einstein archives(档案). "We worked very closely with them to bring the product to market," the company's Dr. Jeanne Lim said.

Einstein robot was introduced to the public at the Consumer Electronics Show in Las Vegas and was quickly hailed by those who saw it. "He became one of the breakout stars of the convention," wrote Melia Robinson on Business Insider. "Crowds flooded into the company to have a look at the little guy."

"Technology is often now very cold and socially isolating(孤立的)," explained David Hanson, the co-founder of the company behind the new robot. "By bringing an lively character into our physical world, we're humanizing(使人性化) the technology instead of dehumanizing the humans."

As for Hanson Robotics, the company has been building human-size robots for over a decade. But this marks the company's first commercially available product. "Professor Einstein is just the start," said Hanson. "We're witnessing the arrival of conversational robots that can walk in our world. It's a golden age of invention."

32. What can Einstein robot do?
- A. Teach you to learn any new language.
B. Have a regular conversation with you.

35. What can be a suitable title for the text?
