Saying "please" and "thank you" is something that British people learn from a very young age. As for requests, we would say "Could you ...?". So after I came to China, one of the first words I learned in Chinese was "xiexie". I wanted people to think I was polite. However, I soon learned that it wasn't that simple.

I noticed that people were confused by me saying "xiexie" and "qing" all the time, as if it wasn't necessary. But I was also confused until I realized that I was being too formal and putting a social distance(距离) between the person I was talking to and myself. My Chinese friends told me that using "please" actually had the opposite effect(反作用) of politeness — it seemed to hurt the building-up of intimacy(亲密关系).

Deborah Fallows described the way a Westerner sees China as a strange mixture of politeness and rudeness: "A person will pour tea or beer for everyone else before pouring his own. But then another will say 'Give me salt!', with no sign of a please or thank you."

A good example of something that confuses foreigners in China is shouting "fuwuyuan!" at the waiter or waitress to get their attention, something that would make everyone else in the restaurant hate you in the UK or the US.

I now understand why people don't say "please" or "thank you" in China as often as we do in the UK. However, I'm afraid I still can't bring myself to shout "fuwuyuan" in a crowded restaurant — my inner polite British person won't let me!

51. Why did the author learn the word "xiexie" first when he first learned Chinese?
A. He wanted to be considered polite.
B. His Chinese friends advised him to do it.
C. He thought it was the easiest word to learn.
52. What might the underlined word "confused" mean?
A. 理智的 B. 糊涂的 C. 清晰的
53. What did the author learn about saying "xiexie" and "qing" from his Chinese friends?
A. It is not necessary at all in China.
B. It is something people only say to strangers.
C. It is not good for developing a close relationship.
54. Which of the following would the author probably agree with?
A. Chinese people should say "please" or "thank you" as often as British people do.
B. It's all right to shout "fuwuyuan" to get a server's attention in a crowded restaurant.
C. Foreigners are confused by Chinese people's mixture of politeness and rudeness.
55. Which is the best title for the passage?
A. Different Politeness in Different Cultures
B. The Same Polite Words All Over the World
C. Which Do You Choose, Politeness or Rudeness?

(C)

请阅读下面短文,根据短文内容,从方框内所给的选项中选出能填入空白处的最佳选项,使短文意思通顺,并在答题卡上将该项涂黑。选项中有一项为多余项。

If you look at the top of your phone, you'll usually see a little symbol that says 3G or 4G. The "G" stands for the "generation" of your mobile network. 56

On March 30, Shanghai vice mayor Wu Qing made the first 5G video call on a Huawei Mate X Smartphone. 57 About 100 times faster than 4G networks, 5G will let people download and upload data(数据) faster than ever before.

5G won't just bring faster mobile Internet. 58

5G could be used to power the Internet of Things (IoT 物联网), that is, a large online network that connects all things and people. Fast Internet speeds will be the key to developing this technology. The IoT could be used in a lot of ways. 59 Your refrigerator could automatically(自动地) place an order online for eggs when it finds that there are no eggs left inside.

60 Today’s self-driving test cars have one problem — lag(延迟). When the car “sees” an obstacle(障碍物), it sends this information to a data center and receives instructions. However, it will be some time before it sends and receives this information. With this kind of lag, the cars might crash because they don’t receive instructions in time. With 5G, this lag will be greatly lowered, making the cars safer.

- A. 5G will help to make self-driving cars safer.

B. People can use it for many other things well.

C. This means you can download a movie in seconds using 5G.

D. Shanghai has also become the first city in China to start testing 5G networks.

E. But these symbols will become things of the past after 5G networks fully arrive.

F. For example, your toaster(烤面包机) could automatically start making breakfast after your alarm rings.

Learn how to drive safely in the UK

British roads are the safest in the world — in 2010, only 3.8 people out of 100,000 died in road accidents. This number is lower than in any other country. If you go there, you should try to drive the same way British people do. This is some advice for visitors who plan to go driving in the UK.

▲ Drive on the left side of the road. In most countries, people drive on the right side. Many visitors have problems because they forget about this difference.

▲ If there is a line of cars, don’t try to go past other people to get to the front. This is called “jumping the line”. If you do this, other people will get angry with you.

▲ Stop at the traffic lights. In the UK, drivers always stop when the light is red, although there aren’t any cars or people around.

▲ Don’t use your horn(喇叭) too much. If you do, people will think you are not polite. If other drivers flash(闪光) their lights at you, then they are probably trying to tell you that they will wait for you to go first.

▲ If you have an accident, then don’t try to bribe(贿赂) the police! If you do, you might finish your visit in prison(监狱).

It is known to us that communication methods(方法) of people have changed a lot. In the long history of the past, people communicated with people who were far from them only by letters, which took a very long time to get the message. People use them to exchange information, ideas and thoughts. Slow as the mail is, it is the cheapest way to communicate with others.

In the late 19th century, telephone was invented, which was much faster than letter, bringing great convenience to people. So as time goes by, telephones become increasingly widely used. Now, the phone has been developed as mobile phone, fixed telephone, Internet telephone and other categories(类别), being an essential(必不可少的) communication tool in modern information society.

The News did a survey about “what is the most important part when people choose the communication method”. Here are the results:

With the development of modern science and technology, the computer has come into our sight. Communication by using computers is fast and easy. In this way, people can send e-mail to each other. A great number of people communicate with others on the Internet, such as the chat room, QQ, WeChat and so on. People can make video calls that not only can hear the sound, but also can see the people you talk to. We can even buy things online instead of paying money in a store.

This year, we will have the 5G network. In a word, we are going to have a better tomorrow, a better world.

66. In paragraph 1, the underlined(划线的) word “them” refers to _____.
67. According to the survey results, when people need to choose the communication method, which is the most important part?
68. What should we do to avoid caring more about mobile phones instead of people around us?
69. Please translate the underlined sentence into Chinese.
70. Which communication method do you like best? Why?
