Kevin and his family had a holiday to his hometown—a very beautiful island. It was a great trip.

They all wanted this trip. Kevin's parents wanted to go out into nature after a long time of work. Kevin needed to take a good rest before the exam. Kevin's brother Jim is in the first grade, so he doesn't have a voice in family things. He was just happy that they were going outside.

The sea was blue. They went boating in the sea. It was so cool. There was no Internet, so they spent the whole time together. They stayed in a small wooden house by the sea. Mom and Kevin cooked delicious seafood. Jim ran after chickens and ducks, and gave them food. When he became tired, he sat next to his dad and helped him fish. He even helped to hook two fish!

It is always good to spend time with families. They liked this trip!

At 8,844.43 meters high, Mount Qomolangma (珠穆朗玛峰) is the tallest mountain on Earth. While it is famous for its beautiful views, parts of the mountain are facing a problem: rubbish. Every year, thousands of visitors throw away tons of rubbish, such as cans (罐) and plastic (塑料的) bags. According to the UN, there has been over 140 tons of rubbish on the mountain.

To solve the problem, China has a new rule. It only lets 300 people climb up the north side of the mountain and only during spring.

Local people cleaned the mountain last year, collecting rubbish at a height of 5,200 meters. This year, the local government plans to spend 4 million yuan on a new clean-up project. Clean-up workers will also collect the bodies of dead climbers. In 2017, over 280 climbers died while climbing the mountain.

The local government is also setting up stations to sort (分类) and recycle rubbish. A group of artists will also try to turn the recyclable rubbish into artwork.

The rubbish on Mount Qomolangma has led to serious pollution. It can be bad for water sources (资源) farther down in the mountain's valley (流域). Nepal is on the south side of Mount Qomolangma. Six years ago, the country asked every climber to take away at least eight kilograms of rubbish. But the climbers didn't always do so because cleaning up the mountain is often as hard as climbing it.

A good book can teach you things beyond(超出) your class. It can open your eyes and clear your minds. If you want to get into a good reading habit, there are a number of ways to develop it.

Plan your time

You should give yourself at least thirty minutes in all for reading every day. When time is set, nothing can change it. For example, make it a habit to read during breakfast or lunch time.

Always carry a book

Wherever you go, take a book with you. When you leave the house, make sure that you always carry a good book as well as your school things. Remember that a book always stays with you.

Find a quiet place

Find a place in your home where you can sit in a comfortable chair. When you read a book, no one will trouble you. There should be no television, computer, music or even noisy family members around you.

Have a library day

Have a library card, and you read as many good books as possible in the library. Make it a weekly trip to the library, you can save a lot of money.

Blog it

One of the best ways to develop a good reading habit is to put it on your blog (博客). If you don't have one, create one. It's free. Ask your friends and family to go there to share your ideas and offer you suggestions.
