As wild fires have killed at least 24 people, destroyed more than 1,400 homes and ravaged(毁坏) 15 million acres, reporters started to focus on the fire of Australia. Hundreds of animals died; many of them might not be found in other countries any more. According to the notice, people may lose at least a quarter of the koalas and a number of the kangaroos when the fire stops.

“We will do something to help these clever animals,” said Kingsley Dixon, an ecologist and scientist at Curtin University. “Even the animals that survived (存活) may die from hunger or thirst,” Professor Dixon added. “It’s terrible news to hear,” he said.

“But it is impossible to know how many animals saved themselves and ran away now. Whatever the numbers, the fire lasts so long that it destroys almost everything. Imagining the number of dead animals is a hard job to do,” scientists say so.

It is not only wild life that get injured(伤害). In Batlow, a video taken by a reporter showed the dead bodies of sheep and cows along a highway. People treat(对待) the bodies carefully. However, things like these will cause the fears of bio-safty(生物安全) around the country.

To protect Australia’s wildlife, many people joined the activities to protect the animals as volunteers. They cannot save Australia’s wildlife on their own. But the volunteer’s work is sending us a message: maybe it is important to take actions to protect wild animals on a hotter planet.
