Family rules help children to learn what is and isn't OK in the family. Following them can help children learn to follow rules in other places, so it's not good for you to make rules too late.

• As parents, when you make family rules, talk about them with your children. They will be happy.

• Good family rules are easy for children to understand (理解). For example (比

如), “Go to bed before nine o’clock!” is good. “It’s important to go to bed early!” isn’t. And good family rules tell children what to do, NOT what not to do. For example, “Keep your room tidy!” is good. “Don’t put your things everywhere!” isn’t.

- People forget things easily, so it’s good to write down the rules and put them somewhere everyone can see.

- There are times when family rules need to change (改变). For example, when your child gets older, you can make rules about helping with housework. Just like making rules, it’s good to let your children make changes to the rules with you.
