My sister finished high school two weeks ago. As a special 26, our parents took us to India. Last weekend was interesting but scary (可怕的).

We went 27 in a small village in India. First, we took a long bus ride to a lake in the countryside. There we put up our tents (帐篷) and made a fire to keep us 28 and cook food on. On the first night, we 29 sat under the moon and told each other stories. But I was so 30 that I went to sleep early.

The next morning, my sister and I got a terrible surprise (惊讶). When we 31 our tent, we saw a big snake (蛇) sleeping near the fire. I was so afraid that I couldn't move outside. We 32 to our parents to let them know about the danger. My dad started to jump up and down in their tent. This woke the snake up and it moved into the forest 33 the lake. My dad told me later that snakes don't have ears 34 they can feel things moving. He also told me it was 35 not to go near a snake. This was a very useful lesson for me.

The woman in the flat upstairs plays her piano after midnight. The family across the street never cleans their garden. The rubbish blows into your garden. The person next door always parks his car in front of your driveway (汽车道).

Have things like this ever happened to you? If so, you may ask yourself, "Who are these people? Why are they doing these things to me?"

These days, _____. Sometimes we share a friendly wave or say hello, but a lot of people don't even know their neighbours' names!

When you don't know someone, it's easy to build up unhappiness. You think, "Maybe they like to make me angry." or "Maybe they do it deliberately (故意地)." Believe it or not, your neighbours probably don't mean to irritate (刺激) you. Often, they don't even know that they are bringing trouble to you.

So before you find some ways to solve (解决) the problem, you should talk about it with them first. When you meet your neighbours, you should talk to them in a friendly way. Say something good about their children or do something else to make them feel good. And if you can think of an easy way to help them, say it.

The broken window

George Ellet has a bright silver dollar (美元) for a New-year gift. He thinks of all the fine things he may buy with it.

The ground is all covered with snow, but the sun shines brightly, and everything looks beautiful. So George puts on his hat, and runs into the street. As he goes skipping along, he meets some boys throwing snowballs. George soon joins in sport. He sends a ball at James Mason, but it misses him. It breaks a window on the other side of the street.

George is afraid that someone will come out of the house and find him. So he runs off as fast as he can. George stops as soon as he gets round the next corner, because he is very sorry for what he did.

He says to himself, "I have no right (权利) to spend my silver dollar now. I should go back and pay for the glass I break with my snowball."

He goes up and down the street and feels very sad. He wishes very much to buy something nice. He also wishes to pay for the broken glass.

At last he says, "It is wrong to break the window, though (尽管) I do not mean to do it. I will go and pay for the broken window. If it takes all my money, I will try not to be sorry. I do not think the man will hurt me if I pay for the mischief (毁损) I did."

George starts off and feels much happier for having made up his mind (下定决心) to do what is right.
